IATA Approves Cuts in Air Fares

By Joseph Fitchett

ternational Air Transport Associa-tion today approved regulations al-lowing member airlines to cut fares and opt out of the organization's price-twing system without forfeiting their IATA membership.

The reforms coincided with reports of U.S. fare agreements with Belgium, the Netherlands, Israel, Poland, and West Germany, that Poland and West Germany that promise a new batch of cheap international airline tickets.

The changes amounted to a retreat by IATA" in the face of the Carter administration's "open skies" policy of sirline deregulation and anti-cartel measures, which al-ready have fostered sweeping transatlantic fare cuts, according to airline specialists interviewed by telephone in European capitals.

Describing the just-adopted IATA rules as opening "a completely new era," a spokesman exlained that member airlines now which Laker Airways never joined a spokesman said in London.

A number of U.S. airlines — Pan American World Airways, Trans World Airlines, Braniff, Delta and National — also joined the price war on the North Atlantic route. European carriers have been split on whether to deregulate, but the U.S. air industry's commitment to more liberal "open skies" approach has convinced a growing number of airline officials that "the writing is on the wall," a U.S. dip-

While recommending the dis-nantling of some IATA practices, Mr. Hammarskjold warned about the possible risks of "unbridled competition" and a "competitive" free-for-all in prices and services," which he said U.S. airlines were seeking worldwide. He said confusion might result for passengers, airlines and governments, which would have to negotiate fare ac-cords instead of leaving it to the IATA consultations.

However, other sources pointed to an opposite trend in the current U.S. bilateral negotiations which promise lower air fares and reduce sovernment involvement in negotiations. An agreement just signed with Belgium is the most liberal ar-

Iran's Oil Workers End 2-Week Strike

TEHRAN, Nov. 14 (AP) — Iran's 37,000 oil workers returned to their jobs today, ending their crippling two-week strike against Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi. But troops opened fire on two antishah demonstrations west of here, killing at least three persons and wounding 19, the official Pars news agency reported.

The National Iranian Oil Co. said that the strike leaders agreed to order a return to work after receiving assurances from the shah, through his representatives, that he agree to their political

The demands were said to be the restoration of civilian government, release of all political detainees and an end to martial law, which was imposed Sept. 8 in Tehran and 12 other cities to suppress a growing wave of civil unrest.

Sources close to the palace said it was possible that national oil offi-vials during negotiations with the strikers had given them a pledge from the shah that their political demands would be met. The shah approved a 22.5-percent pay increase for the oil workers last week. but he also installed a military government Nov. 6.

Expulsions Urged

One of the strikers' key demands was the expulsion of all foreigners from the oil industry. Whether this demand will actually be met was not clear and appeared highly unlikely. The oil industry, on which Iran's economy is built, could not operate without the technical expertise of thousands of foreigners, experts say.

They showed a higher-than-aver age number of leukemia cases in Parowan, Paragonah and Monticel-lo, Utah. The first two cities lie in the path of fallout from Nevada nuclear tests. Monticello is in the center of a uranium mining district. In Parowan and Paragonah, the reports cited four cases of leukemia between 1956 and 1967 — a rate of 18.5 per 100,000 population, 2.6 times the expected rate of 7.1 per 100,000. Six cases were found in the Mon-

No Domestic Orders in Three Years

W. German Nuclear Business Dries Up

By Michael Getler

FRANKFURT, Nov. 14 (WP) -There are a lot of hungry dogs fighting over a few bones these days," says Klaus Barthelt, chair-man of West Germany's Kraftwerk Union, the largest constructor of nuclear power stations in West Germany, and one of the largest such firms in the world.

Although KWU still has about $11 billion worth of back orders on its books, the firm has received no new domestic orders for three years. Without domestic orders, according to KWU official Joachim Hospe, export orders also are hard to get because foreign customers want to buy proven systems.

The reason KWU has no new domestic orders is that West Germany's nuclear power program - the fifth-largest in the world behind the United States, the Soviet Union, Japan and England — has come to a halt over a variety of legal, envi-

European countries. In Sweden last month, the gov-

Attitudes Changed

By most accounts, the Austrian reactor probably would be operating now, were it not for a political blunder by the usually adroit Chancellor Bruno Kreisky. Opinion polls earlier this year indicated majority support for the startup of the plant, and the two main political parties backed it.

But Mr. Kreisky, perhaps sens-ing an easy political gain, insisted on putting it to a public referen-dum, and hung his prestige on it.

The result was that the vote became a polarized political battle, and opponents of the plant at Zwentendorf, north of Vienna, cided by a tiny majority - 50.4 ers about the potential dangers of percent — not to let the state-run nuclear power. Nobody knows utility company begin operation of what will happen now.

The abrupt change of pace, in the country's first nuclear power.

One reason that Austria ultimately teetered before joining the nuclear power club is that, as in West Germany, there is growing concern over where to store the radioactive nuclear waste. Austria, like West Germany, is a federal republic with considerable autonomy in the individual states, and so far neither country's federal govern-ment has been able to find a governor willing to have the waste buried

In West Germany the stakes are many times higher than in Austria because of the dimensions of Bonn's nuclear program, the enormous requirement for energy in the highly industrialized country and the sheer number of people em-

The CAB has invited IATA to show cause by Dec. 20 why the U.S. regulatory agency should con-tinue to allow U.S. arrlines to recognize IATA fare-setting practices, which have been allowed in the past as an exception to U.S. antitrust legislation forbidding companies from cartel actions.

In the last 11 months, an estimated 1,100 Iranians have been killed in anti-government disturbances. Conservative religious groups op-pose the shah's attempts at moder-nizing this overwhelmingly Moslem society, while his political opponents seek an end to his 37-year one-man rule and other governmental reforms. Both groups have called for the shah's abdication.

An end to the oil strike takes considerable economic pressure off the 59-year-old monarch, since the walkout had cost the Iranian treasury about $750 million in lost crude oil exports. Iran earns about $22 billion a year from oil exports.

National Oil spokesman Nezamuddin Mozayeni said workers were streaming back to the oil fields in the southwestern Kuzestan province and at the refinery in Abadan, the world's largest. Bodies of St. John, Elisha Reported Found in Egypt

CAIRO, Nov. 14 (UPI) - Egyptian newspapers, in somewhat conflicting reports, said today that monks at a remote monastery in the western desert have found the coffins of St. John the Baptist and perhaps the Jewish prophet Elisha, as well.

The newspaper Al Akhbar said that a body was found "intact, undecayed and uncorrupted by time" about two years ago by about 80 monks living at the St. Makar Monastery, 60 miles northwest of Cairo, but was kept a closely guarded secret until now.

Al Akhbar's article, which mentioned the discovery of only one coffin, was at variance with the account given by the newspaper Al Ahram, which first revelaed the discovery yesterday and said that two coffins were found in a cave below the church. Al Akhbar quoted Father Yonhanna, an official of the monast-ery, as saying that John's body as well as the corpses of the Old Testament prophet Elisha and some other unnamed saints were found inside a coffin buried below a church inside the monastery. The discovery was kept secret until proper preparations were made, the monk was quoted as saying.

High officials of the Coptic Orthodox Church, founded in the year A.D. 61 by St. Mark, reacted cautiously to the reports. Patriarch Shenudah III set up a committee of experts to examine the

In Vatican City, Monsignor Giovanni Papa, a Vatican historian, said that an accurate investigation would be needed to determine whether one of the bodies is that of John. He said that he had no personal knowledge about the discoveries.

Al Ahram reported that one of the two coffins it said were found was opened in the presence of its reporter, Ezzat el-Saadany, and that the body inside that coffin could not be that of John the St. John, the "voice crying in the wilderness" who baptized Jesus, was beheaded by King Herod, according to the Bible, at the request of the dancer Salome.

Head Still Joined

When the ancient wooden coffin was opened, in the presence of five monks, Abdel Rahman Abdel Tawab, a professor of Christian and Islamic antiquities, and, apparently, reporter Saadany, the head was joined to the body.

The description given by Mr. Saadany, however, appeared to back Al Akhbar's claim that the body, regardless of whether it was that of John the Baptist, was not decomposed.

"In the glow of a candle, the face looked kind," Mr. Saadany wrote. "It was neither old nor young. The hair was more black than white. The eyes were closed, as if he were asleep. The beard, with its black and white hairs, was long. The hands were folded on his chest, and the body was reclining on its right side." According to Mr. Saadany, a monk said the body could be that of Elisha, a lesser-known prophet named by Elijah as his successor.

The other coffin, a monk said, might contain the remains of John the Baptist.
"Let's open it," Mr. Saadany said. But the monks said they could not because they had orders against it from the head of the monastery, Father "Matta, the Poor," who was bedridden.

According to church tradition, the bodies of John the Baptist and

Carter Asks End to Mideast 'Legalisms'

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14 (WP)

— President Carter, displaying impatience and some irritation over the pace of the Middle East peace tiations, last night called on Israel and Egypt to submerge the "little, tiny technicalities" that still separate them to the "paramount" need to reach a peace treaty. In an hourlong, nationally tele-vised interview with Bill Moyers on the Public Broadcasting Service, the president accused both the Egyptians and the Israelis of being stubborn in squabbling over "technicalines" during the drawn-out negotiations since the Camp David numit conference agreement on a framework" for an Egyptian-Is-

By Edward Walsh

And if the talks break down, Mr. Carter warned, "our children, our grandchildren, future generations will look back and say these little, tiny technicalities, phrases, phras-ing of ideas, legalisms, which at that time seemed to be paramount in the eyes of the Egyptian and Israeli governments, have absolutely no historical significance. That is basically what the problems are."

Mr. Carter added that "com-pared to the principles that have already been resolved and the overall scope of things, the disagreements now relatively are insignificant."

Tone of Impatience

The president's comments, and the tone of impatience that accom-panied them, followed by one day his intervention in the peace negotiations with the presentation of a new U.S. compromise proposal for breaking the most serious remaining impasse in the talks.

In the interview, the president singled out neither side for particular criticism and a White House aide said his intention was to urge "both sides" to recognize the needs of the other and to display "additional flexibility." But his comments were laced with critical observations about the talks becoming mired in "legalisms," a trait for which Mr. Begin, a lawyer, has been criticized before.

He told Mr. Moyers that the talks since Camp David have been complicated because, while both sides agreed not to make direct statements to the press, "this has not been honored at all," and by the fact that any agreements must be referred back to the Egyptians and Israeli governments.

In an implied although clear criticism of the Israeli government, the president spoke of the need for the negotiators to "refer their decision back to the head of state or the Cabinet, the Cabinet reverses themselves, reverses the negotiators on a language change or one word and in effect you get the most radical members of the governments who have a major input into the negotiating process . . ." Suggesting that the talks are at a critical stage, Mr. Carter said he could not predict how they would break.

We hope that they will continue to work in reaching an agreement, to understand one another, to balance the consequences of failure asinst the benefits to be derived from the success, and to be flexible on both sides," he said. We cannot make Israel accept the Egyptians' demands, nor vice versa," he added, "We have to try to tone down those demands and use our influence." The president's comments on the Middle East were the highlight of the wide-ranging interview during which he also:

industrial investments in this field are held up around the country be-

power believe it poses to the environment and the population. Court decisions in two West German states last year ordered a halt to new commissioning of nuclear power plants until a safe long-term solution is found to the waste-disposal problem. Since then, work has stopped on three plants under

Dayan Cites Agreement JERUSALEM, Nov. 14 (WP)

- Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said today that 'the entire text' of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty has been agreed upon by both sides, and that the only differences lie in the annex linking the treaty with the future of the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. Arriving here for a two-day Cabinet debate on the progress of the peace talks at Blair House in Washington, Mr. Dayan said, "We are about ending the text of the main peace treaty." Mr. Dayan acknowledged that there are "several items — about two of them that are not not acceptable to us, and I believe about two of them which are not not acceptable to the Egytpians." But, Mr. Dayan said, "as a matter of fact, the entire text of the peace treaty is already finished and the same is [true] with the annexes, the political and military Talking with reporters at Ben-Gurion Airport upon his return, Mr. Dayan said, "That doesn't mean here and there that there aren't differences of views. But as far as the hard job, this is done and we have completed the main draft the text and the annexes --both the political and the military.

economic effects could be severe. The West Germans have identified a geologically suitable poten-tial waste-burial site in the sal domes of Gorleben in the state of Lower Saxony. The problem is that environmental groups are especial active and powerful in Lower Saxony, and the governor, Ernst Albrecht, is one of the most attractive young leaders of the Christian Democratic Party, the main conservative opposition party. Nevertheless, the Bonn govern-ment and the opposition parties re-main committed to the idea that West Germany must have more nuclear-energy development on a "cautious but steady basis," and have brought pressure on the state. Mr. Albrecht agreed in September to make a decision on developing the site by the middle of 1979. Bonn's plan was to have nuclear plants producing 24 million kilowatts of power by 1985, to supply about 10 percent of the country's energy consumption. A new round of plants in the next decade would eventually push nuclear power to 27 percent by the year 2000.

West Germany will not meet its 1985 goal. But officials see no immediate crisis, in part because the post-oil-crisis economic slowdown and energy conservation have reduced the energy-consumption growth rate below predicted levels.

15 Nuclear Plants

West Germany now has 15 nuclear power plants in operation, generating 8.66 million kilowatts. A state court this week approved a partial operating permit for a plant near Karlsruhe which, if given final approval, would increase the total to 9.56 million kilowatts by next year. Eight other plants, under construction in states where no legal challenges have been made, also are scheduled to be ready by 1985. They would bring the total power generated in nuclear plants to just over 18 million kilowatts. The crunch, specialists say, will come later if there are no new building permits soon, because it takes 8 to 10 years to build a plant What had been saving West Germany's nuclear industry from much more severe problems is the heavy flow of foreign orders. But now that, too, is in some danger, construction are expected to be completed in 1981 and 1982 and the work paid for, despite the nurmoil in that country. But the $5 billion project to build four more is now in serious doubt. Even in Brazil, where West German exporters got their biggest sale for a network of reactors and reprocessing plants worth more than $5 billion in 1975, there are now signs of trouble. Discussions are under way over allegations that plant security questions had not been sufficiently dis-cussed beforehand. But the Brazilian government has reaffirmed its mitment to move ahead.

The symposium, prepared with little notice, provides a week of talks between Japanese and U.S. legislators, although unlike other such international gatherings it has not been officially established by Japan's parliament or the U.S.

Even by the expansive standards of congressional junkets, it drew a large crowd — 41 congressmen, 43 staff members and 34 wives, al-though it was not clear whether all

Some were arriving aboard three special military planes, and others on commercial flights. All are being taken by U.S. Embassy automobiles to Tokyo's most elegant hotel, the Okura, where 92 rooms have been reserved for their use.

Secret Arrangements

The arrangements were made in considerable secrecy, in part due to the sensitivities of the congressmen who faced re-election last Tuesday. The U.S. Embassy, which arranged accommodations, made no an-nouncement of the visit, as it usually does when large delegations come on public business. The organizer, Eiichi Nakao, a member of parliament, announced the symposium Friday and said this at the request of the Americans.

U.S. Air Pacts With Belgium,

Poland Eased WASHINGTON, Nov. 14 (AP) The United States has approved more liberal airline agreements with Belgium and Poland, the State Department said yesterday.

The Belgian airline Sabena and the U.S. airline Pan American World Airways will be allowed to compete on fares unless both governments agree to intervene. Belgium will be allowed to add three U.S. cities, two when the agreement is ratified, the other one six months later. Sabena now flies to New York and Atlanta. It has expressed interest in flying to Washington and Chicago. In the agreement with Poland, fares would be subject to veto only by the country in which a flight originates. The Polish airline LOT would be allowed to fly to another U.S. city, probably Chicago, if Poland allows Pan Am to use widebodied jets in its flights to Warsaw. LOT and Pan Am now fly between Warsaw and New York. Poland also agreed that LOT would cede a certain amount of its Warsaw-New York business to Pan Am. Under the formula, Pan Am would have received about $4.5 million in business this year. The change was requested because Poland does not allow its citizens to buy tickets from Pan Am with Polish currency to fly to New York.

Tanzanian officials said the corn will be used in Tanzania's "strategic grain reserve" program, under which foods are being placed in storage to be used in the event of future crop failures.

He said the purpose of the mission is in line with the committee's duty to investigate all matters covered by legislation it handles. Four other committees are represented. The meetings will cover such subjects as defense, agriculture, fishing, science and technology, and trade.

The symposium was arranged by a previously obscure organization called the Japan-United States Interlegislative Council, which lists Prime Minister Takeo Pukuda as benezus at the council of the state of the council of the onorary chairman and former Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi as chairman. But it has no official status as an arm of parliament and is the handiwork largely of Mr. Nakao, according to sources familiar with the planning.

Small Faction

An ambitious young member of Japan's lower house, Mr. Nakao is the leader of a small faction of members of the Liberal Democratic Party known as Seirankai, a group formed in 1973 when its original 31 members took a blood oath to fight legislatively for their causes.

Mr. Nakao said he had hoped for several years to arrange such a symposium to provide an exchange on important issues. Panels will discuss such issues as "the basic structure of Japanese agriculture," Japan's fishing industry and the energy needs of both countries.

Sources here said that the U.S. Congress had never passed a resolution formally authorizing attendance at the conference, as is customary in the case of international exchanges.

U.S. Announces New Rules on Lead Exposure

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14 (UPI) - The Labor Department yester day announced tough new rules to protect workers from lead poison-ing that can cause diseases of the kidneys and central nervous sys-

Assistant Labor Secretary Eula Bingham said that the standards, to be phased in over a 10-year period, will reduce permissable exposure levels from 200 to 50 micrograms of lead per cubic meter of air. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration estimated that 835,000 workers will be covered by the standards, nearly 100,000 of them thought to be currently exposed to lead above the 50-microgram level.

Under the proposal, workers with dangerously high levels of lead in their blood system must be removed from further exposure at no loss in pay, seniority or other em-ployment status until the blood lead level becomes acceptable.

Killer 'Son of Sam'

Transferred to Attica

ATTICA, N.Y., Nov. 14 (UPI) -David Berkowitz, who pleaded guilty to killing six persons in New York City and wounding seven others and who called himself "Son of Sam," has been transferred quietly to the maximum-security prison at Attica, where he will work as a porter with a small group of inmates.

Berkowitz, 25, was transferred before dawn yesterday from the Central New York Psychiatric Cen-ter at Marcy. A spokesman said he will be kept in a reception center, which has about 60 prisoners, and will not mix with the other 1,700

Satellite System Planned by U.S.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14 (AP) The U.S. government announced plans yesterday for a sat-ellite communications system designed to keep communications operating during major disasters.

Under the plan, private industry would develop the system and then lease it to the government at a cost of $20 million for the first five years. Bardyl Tirana, director of the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency, said the government expects to award a contract in March and hopes to have the system operating by 1981.

Mr. Tirana said such a system is needed because "we still have many occasions where communications fail us entirely or are not present at all." He said private industry has the technology required for the system's development. He said emergency ground communications often are useless in a disaster because buildings and mountains often block microwave transmissions. even those coming from a mounprison this year. But Mr. Hunt said he was convinced they had a fair trial and that "the jury made the right decision."

The 10 were convicted of arson and conspiracy in connection with the burning of Mike's Grocery, a white-owned store, on Feb. 6, 1971. The firebombing occurred at the end of a week of racial violence that left one white man and one

Sometime back in the 17th century, an inventive Dutch miller reasoned that by setting the mill's huge blades in certain positions he could broadcast messages to the whole village.

With its blades stopped at a 45° angle, his mill would be saying: "Taking a rest, no grinding this week." Stopped in another position, and gaily deco-

Used in Gas, on Crops

U.S. Study Finds Crop Chemical Lethal

By Jane E. Brody NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (NYT) --A chemical produced in large quantities and widely used as a gasoline additive and fumigant for crops has proved to be the most potent cancer-causing substance ever found in the animal test program of the National Cancer Institute.

The substance, ethylene dibro-mide, also called EDB, for 1,2dibromoethane, is among nearly 300 chemicals thus far tested in this way by the institute.

In studies in which large doses were fed through tubes to rats and mice, ethylene dibromide produced a high incidence of a variety of cancers in both male and female animals, with the first tumors showing up in as little as 12 weeks after the study began. The animals developed cancers of the stomach, hings, liver and blood vessels; the death rate was so high that the experiments were discontinued after they had run only half the planned

The institute said it considered that its findings indicated a potential threat to human health.

About 350 million pounds of EDB were produced in 1976. Nine-ty percent of it is used in leaded gasoline as a scavenger for lead to keep it from accumulating in engine parts. The EDB-lead salt is instead emitted in the exhaust. Five percent of the total production is used as a fumigant in soils and on grains, fruits and vegetables.

Workers Exposed

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health estimates that 9,000 workers are explants. In addition, about 650,000 gasoline attendants and 9,000 agricultural workers are exposed. Although foods are not supposed to contain any measurable residues of the chemical, small amounts have been detected in some products using newer measuring instruments, according to experts at the Environmental Protection Agency.

EDB is a chemical relative of ethylene dichloride, used in the manufacture of the plastics chemical vinyl chloride, which has caused liver cancers in exposed workers. According to a National Cancer Institute study released in September, ethylene dichloride caused cancers of the stomach, uterus, respiratory tract and mammary glands in rats and mice.

The gasoline additive is also related to a pesticide chemical known as DBCP, for 1,2-dibromochloropropane, which was shown a yea ago to cause sterility in exposed workers. EDB has been used as a substitute for DBCP since its use was banned last year. However, a Cancer Institute spokesman said that EDB also adversely affected the testicles of the test animals.

Manufacturers of EDB say that their studies of exposed workers have disclosed neither any increased cancer risk nor any problem with sterility. The Ethyl Corp. of Baton Rouge, La, which is the largest producer of EDB, at its plant in Magnolia, Ark, said that workers producing the chemical for

Other companies, including the Dow Chemical Corp. of Midland, Mich., which have produced EDB for half a century, said no increased incidence of cancer had been found among exposed workers. Both

Ethyl and Dow said that their plants had been operating at well below the current standard for exposed workers of 20 parts of EDB per million parts of air.

Agency is expected to announce a decision in January on whether to ban or restrict use of EDB. The agency has been gathering information and comments relevant to such Į, N

Mesrine Replies to Paris Police, Denying Details of Kidnap Raid

PARIS, Nov. 14 (AP) — The Paris daily Le Matin published an open letter today from Jacques Messine, France's public enemy No. 1, In which he said that his sole aim in life was to fight for the abolition of maximum security areas in French jails.

He said that aim was behind his attempt Friday to kidnap the judge who sentenced him to 21 years in jail for armed robbery. The police have since found two apartments he used a hideouts in the city, stocked with arms, police-band radios and a bulletproof vest. In the handwritten letter to Commissioner Serge Devos, head of the Paris detective squad, Messine said that maximum security prisoners are "arbitrarily treated like caged dogs... with the sole aim of destroying them." The letter was authenticated by Mesrine's fingerprints.

Mesrine escaped from a maximum security prison near Montreal, Canada, in 1972, made a second dramatic escape from a French prison the following year, and broke out of La Sante prison last Mesrine also accused Mr. Devos of launching a campaign to "dirty me," which he said was abetted by a fascist press. Le Matin is Socialist newspaper.

Mesrine said he did not hit the judge's granddaughter during the kidnapping attempt and never used "the kind of language which thrives in your police stations."

"I sprayed some gas so I wouldn't have to hit her," Mesrine wrote. "Everybody inhaled it . . including myself."

Mesrine, who praised France's Socialist Party as being the only party capable of extending social justice, concluded his letter with: 'My regards, Devos, and good hunting."

Malaysia Weighs Plight of Refugees

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia, Nov. 14 (UPI) — Malaysia's for-eign minister said today that his country was still considering granting sanctuary to 2,500 Vietnamese refugees crammed aboard a small freighter.

Hai Hong, anchored off Port Klang, 20 miles west of Kuala Lumpur since Thursday, vowed to stay put and issued an appeal to international organizations for food, milk and medicine.

ments have been unwilling to accept the Hai Hong refugees because of reports that the ship is owned by a syndicate that sent the vessel to Vietnam to collect passengers for $2,000 each.

Asteroids Show New Appeal to Scientists

By John Noble Wilford NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (NYT) -Asteroids used to appeal to poets more than scientists. An asteroid was the home of the young hero in Antoine de Saint-Exupery's charm-ing tale "The Little Prince." There the prince lived and cared for a single, beautiful flower. And when he set out to travel, he used other asteroids of different sizes, shapes and colors as stepping-stones of

For a long time scientists ignored these small rocky fragments that litter the solar system. To astronomers, even the largest asteroids were a nuisance, mere points of un-revealing light in their telescopes. plotting orbital tracks and analyz-ing physical and mineral proper-ties. What they see through tele-scopes suggests that asteroids may be the purest examples of primordial material in the solar system and, perhaps, rich sources of metals and water for future colonies in space.

And it just may be that scientists now have in their hands for the first time close-up photographs of a couple of asteroids, a fact that has aroused their curiosity all the more and inspired some preliminary planning for spacecraft missions to explore and eventually exploit the

Scientists attending an international conference here on Legionnaires' disease repeatedly referred to mental confusion, delinium, hallucinations and even seizures in a significant number of patients, as well as disorders of the kidneys, liver and gastrointestinal tract.

Legionnaires' disease organism, which has been tentatively identified as a bacterium, although in some ways it behaves like other kinds of disease-causing organisms, may be manufacturing a poisonous chemical that gets into the blood and circulates throughout the body causing the symptoms in various

Scientists at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta developed a blood test in January, 1977, that makes it possible to identify victims of Legionnaires' disease and to distinguish them from victims of other types of pneumonia caused by viruses or other bacteria.

Dr. Mitchell Cohen, a hospital epidemiologist for the Center for Disease Control, reported on a study under way at Wadsworth Veterans Administration Hospital in Los Angeles to learn the source of the outbreak that has infected 56 persons there since the hospital opened in March, 1977. Sixteen

He said the study so far indicates that the source of the infection is somewhere in the hospital or on the grounds rather than in the surrounding community.

AQUILA, Italy, Nov. 14 (AP) — Five thousand employees stopped work at a huge electronics plant here today after some came down again with the mystery disease that led to a four-day shutdown last month.

Workers and union officials decided on the stoppage on the spot after some employees suffered names, fainting and itching — the same symptoms that in mid-Octo-ber affected other workers in the plant of the state-owned SIT-Siemens group.

Union sources said the stoppage may go on until the cause of the ease, believed to be some kind of industrial pollution, has been deterrifles step out of hiding, ready to

The Ethiopians and Cubans, helped by Soviet advisers, mounted a counteroffensive that drove the Somali troops back to their homeland and recaptured major settlements from the guerrillas.

The insurgents since have been forced to fight a hit-and-run war. The Ethiopians, with Cuban help, still control the major towns, but the WSLF is attempting to strengthen its hold in the country-

U.S. Advisers on Foreign Bribes Held Immune From Prosecution

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14 (UPI) — The Justice Department says that there are no grounds for prosecution of State Department officials who apparently told U.S. businessmen how to make foreign payoffs before laws were passed making such bribes illeral.

Outreach from Peking

It is scarcely two years since the death of Mao Tse-tung, and suddenly the world is bustling with Chinese emissaries to the remote and alien lands, far beyond the ken of the Chinese revolution and of ancient China itself. An inscrutable People's Republic as an arbiter of power in Asia and the world has long been a fact. But China as a seeker after the arms and technology and, yes, the business of the West is something never before seen, not even in the heyday of China trade a century and a half ago.

The "opening" is both political and economic. It began with the startling visit of Chinese Premier Hua Kuo-feng to Eastern Europe earlier this year, and was most dramatically solidified by the treaty of peace and friendship with Japan signed in Tokyo last month. Less spectacular, but more substantial, are the commercial and technical arrangements, especially the arms sales, which roving Chinese officials are concluding or talking about in Western Europe. Meanwhile, Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping has been visiting Thailand, Malaysia and Singapore to define Chinese leadership in Southeast Asia.

The West is responding with alacrity. U.S. Energy Secretary James Schlesinger has visited Peking and expressed interest in helping the Chinese develop their coal industry. General Motors would like to "modernize" China's automobile plants. There are rumblings of Chinese-U.S. cooperation in looking for oil in the South China Sea, And Inter-Continental Hotels has a $500 million contract to build half a dozen tourist palaces in major Chinese cities.

The knee-jerk reaction to this is that China is trying to develop its economic and technological strength for the continuing struggle with the Soviet Union, and the Americans, at least, are cautious about seeming to be in the position of arming China against the Soviet Union. Certainly the people in Peking still see themselves, in the role of Mao's hears, as guardians and banner-bearers of the correct" form of Marxism-Leninism. But they understand thoroughly that such leader-ship depends mightily on physical strength.

No doubt the West also understands this, if somewhat less thoroughly. What it does see is that the vast Chinese market, so long vainly dreamed of by its entrepreneurs, is creaking open at last. For the moment, then, ideology and even the millennial mysteries of Chinese ways can be relegated to second place. "Do not look down at the precipices." said Mao. Here is one thought that bids fair to become, for the present at least, a widely accepted sentiment.

Battle of the Dollar

If the president has his way — and most economists think he will — the year-long decline of the dollar in foreign currency markets should be checked, at least for now. Mr. Carter's decision to intervene directly on the dollar's behalf, backed up by sharp increases in interest rates, should counter the psychology that has lowered the dollar's purchasing power abroad by an average of 16 percent. That is good news for inflation fighters: every 10 percent dip in the dollar overseas translates into ¼ percent more inflation at home.

But the tough new stand, designed to deter purely speculative attacks on U.S. currency, may eventually clash with domestic growth objectives, and the fact remains that no one has yet found a long-term solution to international exchange instability.

The many reasons for the long slide of the dollar can all be boiled down to one: The Carter administration, unlike some of our major trade partners, has placed a higher priority on jobs and growth than on price stability. Rapid growth raised the demand for imports, thereby pushing the U.S. foreign trade dalance deeply into deficit, white House concern for prosperity and apparent indifference to the dollar's exchange value sent the international financial community scurrying for safer havens - Switzerland, Japan, West Germany - in which to park their money.

The resulting depreciation of U.S. currency was unlikely to continue much longer. Cheap dollars have greatly improved the competitive position of U.S. exports, and foreign products are beginning to be priced out of the U.S. market. Both the Japanese and West German economies, moreover, have been showing increased signs of life, helping boost the worldwide demand for U.S. goods. But changing trade patterns do not show up in the statistics for many months, and it takes even longer for them to penetrate the minds of money traders in Zurich or Abu Dhabi. Carter, who could no longer afford much time to curb inflation, decided to act.

* * * From now on, the Treasury will intervene in currency markets, buying dollars with funds from a war chest of gold bullion and borrowed foreign currencies. Equally important, the Federal Reserve has been encouraged to take a firmer stand against inflation, tightening credit and reassuring foreigners that their dollar investments are secure. With hundreds of billions of dollars sloshing around the money markets, a wave of panic selling could still overwhelm the Treasury's considerable resources. But unless the administration waffles, or West German and Japanese expansion ends, the market probably will respect the rescue effort.

A stable dollar relieves one significant source of pressure on prices, and may itself counter the self-fulfilling pessimism about our ability to control inflation. Some analysts fear that high interest rates will have unwanted side effects, such as a serious decline in housing construction and increased costs for local government loans. For the moment, however, the risks seem bearable. More disturbing is the fact that the program offers no practical promise of stabilizing exchange rates in coming years.

President Carter's advisers long resisted the temptation to rescue the sliding dollar because they hoped to affirm the principle of a free exchange market. By allowing currency values to "float" freely against one another, they thought, the government could better concentrate on domestic economic problems. As the dollar debacle illustrates, however, this theory has not worked well. Washington's benign neglect did have the desired ef-fect of forcing West Germany and Japan to stimulate their economies. But in the meantime, the allies' diplomatic feathers were ruffled, wide swings of exchange rates distorted trade patterns, and few governments resisted the urge to fiddle surreptitiously in the monev exchanges.

The president's economists now implicitly acknowledge that strictly hands-off policies are impractical, but they have no desire to go back to fixed exchange rates. Instead, they want a set of rules for occasional intervention. But as long as most nations are unwilling to accept greater international control over their economies, it is hard to see how the "managed float" can succeed. This chapter of "The Perils of the Dollar" may have been resolved, but there is no satisfactory script for the next chapter, and the next. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Royal Progress

Prince Charles of Britain turned 30 on Tuesday, a shocking bit of news to those of us who remember the baby prince cooing in the arms of his mother, or toddling around Buckingham Palace — it seems like yesterday. His mother was queen four years before her 30th birthday. Fortunately, Charles has had more time to enjoy his princehood and to ease past the decade of his 20s, without having to bow his head beneath the crown.

This is as it should be; for like a little learning, a monarch in his 20s (God save the Oueen, of course) is a dangerous thing. In one's 20s one thinks like a pre-Columbian. The world is flat; and on the 364th day of one's 29th year, the dragons of decrepitude will undoubtedly surface, flashing their dentures. It is only when one finally reaches one's 30s that one realizes what the new world of responsibility means, what vast possibilities — perhaps even happiness — lie at the coast of maturity.

Not that we would wish to foist the metaphor of the new world on the bonnie prince, He is not of our world, nor in truth does he seem to suffer from the failings of young people generally, having appeared, in the past few years especially, to be mature enough for anything, including a kingdom. He is moderate and gracious, which is more than can be said of Charles II. And he has a good head on his shoulders, which is more than can be said of Charles I. Long live he. THE WASHINGTON POST.

PARIS - The art world is saddened by the death last week of one of the great masters of the impressionistic school: Camille Pissarro. His warmth and generosity had made him an eridearing figure to many painters, and among those who sought his advice were Gauguin, Van Gogh, and Cezanne. Pissarro was born in the Virgin Islands in 1803, and educated in Paris. His first exposition was in 1859, when he was nearly 30, and showed clear signs of the Barbizon school. Adopting Seurat's divisionism in the 1880s, he returned in his last years to a freer interpretation of nature.

At the same time, mostly because of the same developments, the tenuous relationship between the two wings of the Zimbabwean Patriotic Front — one headed by Robert Mugabe, the other by Joshua Nkomo — probably has been weak-ened, too.

The front still is generally considered to be winning the guerrilla war within Rhodesia. In September alone, a net of 1,490 whites - a - took what is sometimes called the "chicken run" and fled the country.

Accord Unlikely

But development within the front-line states and the front itself, if they are accurately perceived, make a negotiated settlement and a multiracial Zimbabwe less likely than they seemed last April at their meeting with representatives of the United States and Britain at Dar es

Front-line disunity is so palpable that a ranking Tanzanian official said recently, "There is no frontline anymore." He was speaking ironi-cally but his remark reflected numerous visible strains, beginning with those caused by "secret" talks between Ian Smith and Joshua Nkomo, an initiative pushed by Zambia and Nigeria (not a frontline state, but one deeply interested in southern African liberation).

President Julius Nyerere, of Tanzania, ostensibly because he feared treachery by Smith, was the leading force in putting an end to the Smith-Nkomo talks. President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, Nkomo's leading patron, speaks with restraint about Nyerere but officials around him, as well as Nkomo himself, make no secret of their bitterness. They believe Nyer-ere torpedoed the talks because he feared they would result in pre-emi-nence for Nkomo over Mugabe in a Zimbabwean government.
President Samora Machel of Mo-

resident samora macae of mo-rambique — where Mugabe's forces have their base — supported Nyerere in his opposition to the Smith-Nkomo meetings. And he is reliably reported to be bitter at Kannda for another reason — Zambia's reopening of its border with Phodesia

Kaunda justified this action on grounds that Zambia's economy was being stifled, particularly owing to the need for fertilizer shipments before the present planting season. But Machel, too, has closed

Machel did not attend an Oct. 29 front-line "summit" in Dar es Salaam and there is much evidence that his anger at Kaunda was the reason. Patriotic Front unity, never very strong, almost certainly has been weakened by the same principal events — the Smith-Nkomo meet-an-Rhodesian border. The former not only excluded Mugabe but the settlement formula discussed would have placed him second to Nkomo in a Zimbabwean government. Yet, it is Mugabe's guerrillas who are doing the most extensive and successful fighting within Rhodesia.

The border opening not only gave Rhodesia a political lift. It caused Nkomo, who is sheltered in Zambia, to announce that his forces would not attack the rail line carrying shipments to that country through Rhodesia. Mugabe's forces have said only that they will continue military operations as usual, Some trains to Zambia already have been attacked, by parties so Thus, the two patriotic front factions are more wary of each other and the weakened front-line state certed pressures to bear on them. So the war that only a few months ago seemed reasonably near a negotiated settlement now seems more likely to be fought out to the bitter end, with great loss of life, accelerating white flight from Rhodesia, and unhappy consequences for the economic future of Zimbabwe.

Anthony Sampson From London:

- In the light of this sanctions fiasco, the justification for maintaining the secrecy of cabinet meetings appears still more dubious.

ONDON, — Who really takes the decisions at the top of the British government, and how? The mystery at the heart of the unwritten constitution has always fasci-nated and exasperated students of politics, but never more so than in the past few weeks, in the arguments about the breaking of oil sanctions to Rhodesia. To be specific: Did Sir Harold Wilson really not know (as he-claims) that oil was being allowed to go through to Rhodesia in 1969, with the connivance of his own civil servants; and if not, why not? How can a prime minister evade such a

The central puzzle lies in the na-ture of the British cabinet itself, which has preserved much of its secrecy ever since its very existence was secret, as the council of the king's private advisers. Since those days, the Thursday meetings of the cabinet and the general subjects that come before it, have become well known. But many big decisions can be made which never come before the full cabinet.

The machinery for this is the cabinet committee, a group of ministers appointed by the prime ministers appoi ister to deal with a specialized subject; but the actual names and scope of these committees have been jealously guarded. Journalists and political scientists have repeatedly demanded to know who was thus secretly settling the future of their country; and four months ago the weekly New Statesman — with a new-found investigatory zeal managed to uncover the names of the committees in this "secret constitution."

Callaghan's Stand

But the present prime minister, James Callaghan, has still insisted, like his predecessors, that they and their members should remain secret In a confidential minute to his colleagues, (also leaked to the New Statesman, and published last week) Mr. Callaghan explained that disclosure "might lead to argument about the status of the decision or demands that it should be endorsed by the full cabinet."

To reveal the names of the committee chairmen would make it harder for the prime minister to make changes, and would make members of Parliament want to question chairmen in the Parliament; and any disclosure would be "more likely to whet appetites than

But what this really means is that a prime minister can carefully choose his own committee, circumventing both the full cabinet and Parliament, to push through or suppress a policy. The practice of course, is time-honored: There has always been some kind of shifting "inner cabinet" — like that which Sir Anthony Eden assembled in 1956 to plan the secret Suez adventure. Since then the suspicions have grown, that the full cabinet can become a facade behind which both the prime minister and senior civil servants can manipulate critical

Into the Open

These concerns have now come into the open in the debates about the breaking of oil sanctions, fol-lowing the publication of the report by the lawyer, Tom Bingham. Its most sensational document reveals how in February, 1969, the British oil executives met with civil servants and a cabinet minister, George Thomson, to discuss the "swap" arrangements that had been made to allow French oil into Rhodesia — a flagrant breach of the spirit of sanctions. Accounts of this meeting were sent to, among others, a secretary to the prime minister, Harold Wilson; but in the parliamentary debate last week Mr. Wilson firmly denied that he had ever seen the crucial document, and he quickly shifted the responsibility back to these familliar unlovable bogeys, the multinational oil com-Mr. Wilson's profession of igno-rance has been treated with widespread scepticism, not least by the cabinet minister involved. George Thomson (now Lord Thomson); and the suspicion remains that Mr. Wilson, while publicly declaring the necessity for sanctions, was carefully turning a blind eye to the deliberate loophole. The arrangements that had been made between the oil companies and civil segunts. the oil companies and civil servants never came before the full cabinet, and any democratic control was effectively avoided.

Complaints

All this appears to support the recurring complaints against the secret workings of the cabinet; that they give far too much scope for the prime minister to evade the objections of his colleagues; and that they enable civil servants to make their own cynical bargains behind a sham cabinet facade. In the unfold-ing story of how sanctions were broken, the senior civil servants appeared all too anxious to agree with the oil company executives; and at least two of them later joined the oil industry themselves. In the light of this sanctions fiasco, the justification for maintaining the secrecy of cabinet committees appears still more dubious. For when Mr. Callaghan complains that their disclosure "might lead to argument about the status of the decision," he is really touching at the heart of the public's suspicion: that the secret committees are intended to by-pass democracy.

Vatican's Ostpolitik Turns a Page

By Leopold Unger

BRUSSELS — "The Kremlin has been keeping a close eye on the weather vane and now knows what kind of wind is blowing on the Roman Catholic Church. But it still doesn't know where the big ship Vatican is going to touch

Moscow's uncertainty, as ex-plained by an observer in Warsaw, is the result of an equation in which all the new factors have been combined for the first time.

The first non-Italian pope in five centuries, the first Pole and first citizen of a Communist country on the throne of St. Peter, John Paul II is also the first pope to have been born after the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution and the first to know personally what it is to be a worker (he was employed in a factory during the German occupation of Poland), to have lived in the context of a socialist state, to have had the experirace of contacts with "Communist" Catholics and with a Communist government and to have openly defied a totalitarian regime in the name of human rights. Officially, the Soviet Union where the press needed no less than 10 days of reflection before pubishing in the weekly Novy Mir the pope's picture and a comment on his election — believes that there is no reason to fear that relations between the Vatican and Eastern Enrope have reached a dangerous turning point.

Fruit of Detente

The new pope immediately de-clared that he would continue to follow the principles that guided his predecessors and that he would his predecessors and that he would ms predecessors and that he would seek to enlarge the Vatican's diplomatic network, and its worldwide dialogue, "to include all those who are legitimately responsible for the common good of society."

Despite this evident goodwill, analysts in the Kremlin are convinced that a page has definitely been turned in the Vatican's Ostpolitik.

The new pope does not speak

The new pope does not speak Russian," an expert who preferred not to be identified, said recently, "but he understands Russians very well."

The Vatican's Ostpolitik was the fruit of detente between the two superpowers. Only six months after Polish bishops remained highly susthe Cuban missile crisis, on March 7, 1963, Pope John XXIII conferred with Alexis Adjoubei, the editor in chief of Izvestia, as well as son-in-law and special envoy of Nikita Khrushche

The only things that divide us are diametrically opposed concepts... that is, very little," the pope said at the end of the audience which, in effect, inaugurated the Vatican's Ostpolitik.

The church has followed this policy for 15 years. Under Paul VI, who succeeded John XXIII, the church refused to choose between two forms of society, between two political blocs. It proposed that points of contrast be played down in favor of points of contact even if this step-by-step policy meant that the Vatican had to accommodate itself to what Msgr. Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican's Kissinger, called the "specificity of the Soviet

This accommodation included the Vatican's total and "fraternal recognition" of the Russian Orthodox hierarchy, where, as it is openly said in Moscow, even some of the bishops are atheists," who never have spoken in defense of the persecuted faithful - not to mention the nonbelievers. Furthermore, in the name of realism, the Vatican also forced its martyrs - the Hungarian Cardinal Mindszenty and the Ukrainian Slipyi — to stay quiat after their return to the West.

Silent

And when the Vatican remained silent in 1972, after a Lithuanian student burned himself to death to protest the persecution of the church, it was a thunderous and deafening silence.

The Kremlin view of the new Vatican can be reduced to a few basic points. Overall, the ascension of Cardinal Wojtyla to the papacy means that the Holy See will adopt an Ostpolitik with a more human face than has been the case up to now. According to a Polish specialist in religious matters, in the past, only the demands of certain bishops — those of Chile, for example - were legitimate and progressive, while similar requests from

This double standard has come to an end with John Paul II. The pope was a firm defender of human It must be said, however, that that in the Vatican. In other words, according to the Polish specialist, the Vatican will cease being a dome of silence when the church of Eastern Europe decides to speak. According to Jean Francois Revel of the French magazine L'Express, "The Church of Rome has just brought home its pontifical Sakharov."

rights in Poland and he will remain

But the Poles are more realistic and the Vatican is not Cracow. More than a Polish pope, Karol Wojtyla is a Pole who became pope, a Pole who did not appreciate the Vatican's geopolitical pru-dence, which at times appeared to be steered in cowardice.

Assails Racism

Furthermore, in dealing with this pope, the Kremlin can no longer count on the traditional anti-Semitism of the conservative Polish church. It is true that the church of Poland was more than reticent about condemning the regime's anti-Semitism and this not only be-cause of the Jews who took part in the establishment of a Communist regime in Poland. And it was careful not to mention Jews as the victims of purges, when in 1968 it belatedly assailed "sessions of hatred" and "the frightening shadow of racism" in Cardinal Wojtyla was, is and remains beyond suspicion of the stain of anti-Semitism. According to Rabbi Marc Tannenbaum fo the American Jewish Committee, the only rabbi present at the Vatican Council, "Cardinal Wojtyla, among the Polish bishops, proved the one who was most friendly to the Jews of Poland and the most hostile to

In 1971, Karol Wojtyla was the first Polish cardinal to visit the synagogue of Cracow during a Sab-bath service. And, according to Rabbi Tannenbanm, John Paul II has yet to take a stand concerning Israel.

Polish Communist Party Chief Edward Gierek will be forced to accede to the demands of what he calls his "Catholic minority" — 93 percent of Poles have been baptized as Catholics — and Leonid Bre-zhnev will be forced to confirm his vassal's largess or run the risk of clamping a safety valve on uncontrollable pressure. This is where the real danger lies for the Kremlin. For even before last month's elec-tion, it considered Polish "liberalism" to be a danger, too excessive and too contagious to be tolerated in Eastern Europe.

'Sorcerer': Wages of Remakes

By Thomas Quinn Curriss DARIS, Nov. 14 (IHT) — "Sorcerer" (at the Ermitage and the Cluny Ecoles in English) is an American remake of the late H.G. Clouzot's admired film, "Wages of Fear." As is the case appear with all remakes — to to contra-be not a single exception to contra-it is merely a pale with all remakes - there seems to dict the rule — it is merely a pale ghost of its former self, perhaps partially because it has received an all-out Hollywood production.

"Wages of Fear" was derived from a novel by Georges Arnaud, an exponent of what was once known as "red-blooded adventure." Writing in the tradition of Jack London and Rudyard Kipling, his life story topped his tallest tale. Born in Montpellier, he complet-

His celebrated story takes place in an oil-well settlement in the Latm-American wilds. A derrick blows up, probably due to sabotage, and ignites a conflagration in which many workers are killed Panic flares with the flames; to halt the raging fire's spread, it is deemed necessary to bring in high explosives. The cargo is too dangerous for air transport, and must be loaded onto two trucks. Four men with shady pasts, evading local justice, er as drivers, unable to resist the alluring salaries proposed.

The perilous journey tests their courage and perseverance as they fight their fears. Yet despite their fortitude, they do not survive.

The youthful lover of an aging woman becomes obsessed by the fresh beauty of her adolescent daughter. The girl, observing the means to pay back her mother's harsh treatment, uses the situation to her own considerable advantage and the bitter struggle heads for a violent climax. Brocka has presented his passion-ridden tale with unswerving realism and drawn from its sex duel — with Mona Lisa, an imposing actress, as the in-satiable older woman, and Hilda Koronel, a stunning starlet, as the conniving daughter — scenes of high dramatic voltage. Both direction and performance are excellent throughout, and the namby-pambyism vis a vis love scenes that has hitherto shackled the Philippine cinema is thrown off here with a

About 75 horses, all over 15 years old, have been phased out in an Interior Ministry economy drive; the patroling will be done by cars. Twenty-six of the animals were sold in an auction earlier this week. Horse butchers paid around 500,000 lire (about $600) a head.

The transactions were called a tragedy by Rome's daily newspaper Il Messaggero.

None of the horses is known to have been slanghtered yet, but there seems no organized move-ment to save them, either. Another daily, Paese Sera, says that unless an animal-loving notable intervenes — it suggests French actress Brigitte Bardot, who has campaigned widely against seal-slaughters — no such campaign will be mounted.

This was the second recent controversial decision here involving horses. "Passe Montage," the first film of Jean-Francois Stevenin (at the Saint-Andre des Arts and the Olympic) is filled with overwhelming nostolgia for the cow pastures. Done in impressionistic fashion, it tells of a city white-collar worker who drives to the Jura mountains and is there converted to the beauties of wild life by the disarming friendship of a utopian hermit. Stevenin undertakes the part of the hospitable bumpkin, and the plump Jacques Villeret is the refugee from metropolis. "I would rather sit on a pumpkin and have it all to myself than be crowded on a velvet cushion," wrote Thoreau, which aptly summarizes the film's

Eating Out

An Old-Fashioned Swedish Tavern in Stockholm

By Jan Sjoby

C'TOCKHOLM, Nov. 14 (IHT) Less than a man's age ago, this beautiful, water-laced city was aglow with small Amsterdam-like "brown cafes," serving food, beer and coffee at moderate prices. The beer was admittedly lousy, the cof-fee was weak and the food was machs — fried salt Iceland herring with onions, potatoes and cream sauce; super-salted Baltic "chim-neysweep, " mini-herring blackened over charcoal or on an ungreased cast-iron slab; Swedish "beefsteak" with omions that was tough but delicious for a man with reasonably sound molars.

The customers were a mixed lo ranging from brickmasons and stevedores to gentlemen of the press and associate professors, meaning anyone who couldn't afford the roughly $1.50 for a more haxurious repast at one of the more "respectable" establishments.

The cafes were as diversified as the clientele: there were bad places, indifferent places, good places and excellent places.

Alas, that has changed - the brown cases have been turned into hamburger joints, Chinese restau-rants and pizzerias. Others have metamorphosed into imitation pubs bearing not the slightest resemblance to the public houses in Britain and Ireland. The chief attraction is not the bar but the dimly lit gaming-rooms with one-armed bandits and roulette tables, and the clientele isn't playing with or for Monopoly money. Conversation in the casinos is difficult because of cardrumsplitting jukeboxes in constant operation. But one remarkable exception is the Kloster Pub, formerly known as the Klosterbran Cafe, in central Stockholm. It opened in the St. Clara section in 1896 and hasn't changed much since 1912, when it moved to its current location. St. Clara was the hub of the conservative press, but the relocation was near Norra Bantorget (known as Stockholm's "Red Square"), which housed the editorial offices of the now defunct daily Social-Demokra-ten and the headquarters of the National Labor Federation. The Klosterbrau was thus more popular and more accessible to radical reporters and editors than to their conservative colleagues back in St. Clara.

I lived in Stockholm in the early and middle '60s, and used to drop by from time to time. The beefsteak-with-onions was quite acceptable, and so was the salt herring. The beer was better — in "best deal in town."

the mid-60s the government began to allow the production and sale of "middle beer"; it was 3.5 percent alcohol, and while still fairly bland by, say, Czech or Belgian stand-ards, it was better than the previous 2.8 slop, criminally labeled "pilsner." When I learned that the cafe was to be turned into a "pub," I vowed never to return (a decision easy to make, since I was about to leave on an extended foreign tour).

Back in Stockholm recently for a quick visit, I complained to a group of students in a fairly posh hotel bar about the astronomical local prices for food and drink.

Misgivings With some misgivings, I went there the other day at around 3 p.m.. The place was more or less the same: the patina on the wooden table tops and benches, the dark wood wainscoting, the allegorical paintings on the canvas strips over-head (still all but obliterated by the exhalations of generations of smokers). The only real difference was that you ordered your meal and picked up your beer at the bar, then found a table. The matronly waitresses have been replaced by fleet-footed Greek and Spanish

"Try Kloster Pub," said one, waiters who deliver your plates to your table. The portions are gener-ous and solidly Swedish — and the prices are reasonable, at least by Stockholm standards.

"We serve the cheapest beer in town," said the barmaid.

Speaking of beer: last year the new government did away with "middle beer" and substituted something called "people's beer," in effect the same 2.8 slop that used

'New Beaujolais' Hits the Bistros

THEIZE, France, Nov. 14 (1HT) harvesting. The growers turned — A mad scramble begins to-jubilant, for the late sun ripened night at midnight as trucks of every size from mini-vans to great semis roar out of the villages of the Beaujolais onto the tumpike heading north for Paris. Tomorrow is the legal release date for new Beaujolais.

Bistros and wine stores will be crowded with clients eager for a taste of the first wine of 1978. Their for this year's wine is all but perfect and there is plenty of it.

Rising Prices

Contrary to other regions, Beauolais produced well this year, 1.2 million hectoliters, enough to fill 160 million bottles. Prices, no one will be surprised to hear, are already rising over those of last year's small, mediocre crop.

If the average price for a 215-liter piece is 1,250 francs (about $290), some have been sold for as much as 1,357 francs, according to Jean Garlon, a grower in this lovely vil-lage of ocher stone houses. But Beaujolais will probably sell very well whatever the price because it is so good this year.

Garlon says that old-timers claim they haven't seen such a marvelous fall and harvest since 1912. Things were not so promising earlier in the year. Spring was late and cold, which retarded the flowering of the vine. This inevitably meant a late harvest, which usually makes for poor wine. After last year's miserable crop, the growers were

As Garlon's wife Marie-Claude says, "You have to have a sturdy character to be a grower. It's a dif-ficult profession. You're always in doubt until the grapes are actually fermenting in the vats." But the sun came out in Scotembe that Beaujolais and Beaujolais-Villages will sell well this year but that the crus (Brouilly, Morgon, etc.) may price themselves off the consumer's table.

They are likely to start high in price and fall later if the clientele refuses to go along. Much of the crice boom is caused by Swiss and German buyers whose overvalued currencies make Beaujolais cheap at any price.

For a taste of new Beaujolais, try these bistros, all of which are well known for the quality of their wines: La Cloche des Halles, 28 Rue Coquilliere (1): Henri IV, Pont Neuf (1), opposite the statue of its namesake: Le Rubis, 10 Rue du Marche Saint-Honore (1); La Tar-tine, 24 Rue de Rivoli (4), open Sundays but closed Tuesdays; Au Petit Bacchus, 13 Rue du Cherche-Midi (6), closed Sundays and Mondays; Au Sauvignon, 80 Rue des Saints-Peres (6); Tourette, 70 Rue de Grenelle (7); Ma Bourgogne, 133 Boulevard Haussmann (8); Le Raiye, 267 Rue du Faubourg Saint-Martin (10); Le Rallye, 6 Rue Daguerre (14), closed Sundays and Mondays; La Royale, 80 Rue de l'Amiral-Mouchez (14); Aux Negociants, 27 Rue Lambert (18); Chez Serge, 7 Boulevard Jean-Jaures, St.-Ouen (Metro: Marie de St.-Ouen).

TUC Rejects Pay Guides

LONDON, Nov. 14 (AP-DJ) -Britain's Labor government and the leadership of the Trades Union Congress today failed once again to agree on a mutual approach to pay policy for the current 12-month period.

The major stumbling block was the government's continued insistence on setting a maximum level on wage settlements — in this case of 5 percent — consistent with the objective of fighting inflation.

The unions, on the other hand, remained welded to their committment for a return to voluntary col-lective bargaining, unfettered by governmental guidelines or restric-

Others, especially Britain and Italy, but also France, want the indicator to trigger early intervention.

Most EEC members want the credit facilities in the EMS — to be available until a European Monetary Fund is set up in two years — to be widened from the currently lion, of which about $84 million available 10 billion European units of account to 25 billion (one EUA is currently worth about $1.34). The Germans and the Dutch insist that the amount should be held at only 18 billion EAU.

Sources said a compromise, whereby the Germans will agree to a higher credit volume and the others drop the demand for interven-tion on the basis of the basket indicator, appears most probable. These sources said the Germans. while not openly admitting it, are more concerned about the basket An executive of another creditor bank stated: "It would be reasonable to aspect, given what has been able to aspect, given what has been appeared as a content of the creditor of the creditor bank stated: "It would be reasonable to aspect, given what has been appeared as a content of the creditor of th bank stated: "It would be reasonable to suspect, given what has happened there, that Nicaragua and its banks might be heard and the suspect by credits which would undermine the EMS credibility

One source said another problem, more legal than technical, quest to that of a corporation in the midst of a labor strike, needing ading creating a European Currency Unit (ECU). At the last EEC summit in Bremen, West Germany, ear-ly in July, leaders stated that the ECU should be the center of the new EMS. Rothschilds Aim at Cohesive Structure

Baron Guy de Rothschild

By Paul Lewis

PARIS, Nov. 14 (NYT) — The younger French Roth-schilds are trying to bolster their family's fortunes and retrieve its reputation for financial wizardry, both of which now seem threatened by poor investments made by their fathers.

This is the essential signifi-cance of the absorption, an-nounced this month, of the French Rothschild's principal holding company, the Compag-me du Nord, by the Banque Rothschild, the Paris-based bank also controlled by the family. Increasing rumors that the French Rothschilds are in trouble reflect the demonstrable fact that, as one French banker put it, almost every big business de-cision they made in the last 10 years has been bad.

Unlike their British cousins, the French descendants of Meyer Amschel Rothschild, the Frankfurt banker who founded the dynasty in the 18th century, have made substantial industrial investments out of their own pockets, many of which have

Last year, the Compagnie du Nord reported a $7 million loss after sharply writing down the book value of many of its holdings. For the first half of this year, Societe Imetal, which holds most of the French Roth-schilds' metal and mining investments, and in which Compagnie du Nord has a 20-per-cent stake, was deeply in the

Profits Down

Meanwhile, the Banque Rothschild is feeling the financial consequences of its expensive rush into branch banking, with profits down last year to $6 million from $10.5 million in 1976. In an effort to improve the family's financial position, the French Rothschilds are now expanding the bank's capital base through the merger with the Compagnie du Nord, while at the same time promoting three younger family members, David, Nathaniel and Eric de Rothschild, into front-line management positions and switching the group's focus back to banking and away from industrial adventures.

"We aim to give the group t more cohesive structure. David de Rothschild said in an inter-view. But we have to prove ourselves in day-to-day manage-ment as well. We don't want to become premature chairmen, running the group from a dis-tance with a soft hand."

So ultimate control will remain where it is now, with the senior Rothschilds: the Baron Guy de Rothschild, who is David's father and current chairman of the bank, and his

"The key to our plans is the merger because it gives the bank a stronger capital base," David de Rothschild said. "It will raise the bank's capital from 250 million francs to 800 million francs, which means we can make more and bigger loans." This would represent an increase from $60 million to $200 million.

But other French bankers argue that while the merger may increase capital, it also means the bank must take into its own portfolio all the doubtful investments the Rothschilds have made in the past through the Compagnie du Nord.

One French banker warned that the bank's portfolio would lose quality, and if the bank ever had to report a loss, it could lose access to the moneyInvestors Wary of Slowdown

Dollar Firm On Support By Officials

LONDON, Nov. 14 (AP-DJ) ---After opening lower, the dollar recovered lost ground today to finish little changed against the Deutsche mark, Swiss franc and yen as the result of central bank support, dealers said.

Dealers said that apart from a flurry in the early morning, when banks in the Far East were heavy sellers of dollars, trading volume was moderate. Accordingly, they estimated that central banks did not have to absorb a lot of dollars to stabilize the rates.

The dollar ended at 1.8865 Deutsche marks compared with 1.8870 late yesterday. It edged higher against the Swiss franc to 1.6297 from 1.6270 and was about unchanged against the yen at 188.57.

Sterling rose to $1.9716 from $1.9671 as its trade weighted index moved up to 62.4 from 62.2. Dealers said that better-than-expected trade figures accounted for the gains.

In trading for French francs, the dollar edged higher to 4.3250 from 4.3138. Some short-term French franc interest rates were lowered. Moreover, there was some conjecture in the market that French authorities might engineer lower exchange rates for the franc to bring it into the enlarged currency snake at a more suitable level.

Elsewhere, the dollar moved down against the Benelux curren-cies and lira in the absence of official support against those currencies. However, the Canadian dollar weakened to 85.15 U.S. cents from 85.36.

Meanwhile, gold gained slightly in London to finish at $210 an ounce, up from $209.63 late yester-

The Paris-based Coordinating Committee on Export Controls (Cocom), made up of North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations (except Iceland) and Japan, meeting for the first time in 3 years, is hav-ing a fresh look at the situation in view of the considerable technological progress made by the Soviet Union and other Communist nations in recent years. With the opening to the West of the Chinese market and growing competition among industrial nations, all major members are seeking relaxations from Cocom's list comprising some 200 items.

According to Cocom sources, Ja-pan is seeking relaxation of restric-tions on 53 items out of some 150 Japanese-made products. The Unit-ed States and Britain have present-ed demands for the liberalization of more than 50 items each, but are also calling for tighter controls on others. France and West Germany are each seeking relaxation on more than 15 items.

The current Cocom meeting here is expected to end by mid-Decem-ber. But discussions are scheduled to resume in April and to continue through June. A consensus is already emerging, however, that the original criteria for imposing embargoes are now obsolete, sources Helping business and government respond to people's needs: a world-wide commitment from Pitney Bowes.

rudential Assurance Co., Ltd., United Kingdom

Banco do Estado de São Paulo, Brazil

Throughout the world, businesses and governments face an ever-growing challenge in communicating with the people they serve. Customers demand greater satisfaction, better performance. Citizens demand more and costlier services.

To respond effectively, your organization-be it part of industry or government-must streamline its flow of information or face loss of business, loss of confidence.

Increasingly, this solution involves Pitney Bowes: the world's leader in mail and paperhandling systems and retail price-marking systems. For over 50 years, Pitney Bowes has successfully helped organizations -from the smallest to the largestcommunicate more quickly, more efficiently and more effectively.

This success has always been based on a staunch dedication to product excellence, integrity of service and an eye to the future. And is evident in the firm's long-term relations with many leading public and private institutions world-wide.

To the people of Pitney Bowes, the job ahead calls for even greater commitment: as a society grows more complex, so will its communications requirements. You can be assured of a capable, trustworthy partner to help you meet those needs. A partner named Pitney Bowes.

Rembrandt country is Rabobank country.

Kembrandt found his inspiration in Holland, other major European cooperative banks. This, together yet created art with a worldwide appeal. The Centrale Rabobank also finds its inspiration in Holland... yet increasingly provides services in the world at large. With a strong agricultural background, the Centrale Rabobank heads a cooperative banking organisation with over 3100 offices and a combined balance sheet total exceeding 61 billion Dutch guilders (in excess of US $ 26 billion) in 1977. This makes the Rabobank not just one of the largest banks in Holland and one of the 35 largest banks in the world, but also a bank with deep roots in almost all sectors of Dutch economic life.

■ he Centrale Rabobank is now expanding worldwide with a full range of banking services. To accelerate this expansion, we recently co-founded the "Unico Banking Group", linking us with five with the support of London and Continental Bankers Ltd., has strengthened our operations by giving international clients unparalleled on the spot service.

n addition, we are active in the Euro-currency and Eurobond markets. Our international transactions in foreign currencies, Euro-credit loans and participation in new issues, are showing a remarkable growth.

Centrale Rabobank, International Division, Catharijnesingel 20, P.O. Box 8098, Utrecht, The Netherlands, Telephone 030-362611. Telex 40200.

THE FLOUNDER By Gunter Grass. Harcourt Brace, Jovanovich 547 pp. $12.

Reviewed by Karl Keller

THE HERO is immortal, a man who has lived in 11 time-phases since the early days of civiliza tion and has been entangled with 11 women, all of them cooks. During the Stone Age, "when myths still cast their shadows," he caught a talking flounder and this mystical fish has advised him through the ages, goading him from matriarchy to patriarchy but never, despite the shrewdest machinations, managing to rid him totally of subjection to

In his present-day incarnation, Gunter Grass' hero tells his preg-nant wife, Ilsebill, stories of his pre-vious lives and the women he shared them with, from threebreasted Awa in the Stone Age, who kept her menfolk content if tame, to poor Sibylle, murdered in a vicious male chauvinist backlash. These are all cooks who are inside him and he needs nine months, the span of the book, as he says, "to deliver myself of my cooks."

Simultaneously, the flounder, who has again allowed himself to be caught — this time by a woman - is attempting to defend himself before a female tribunal against charges of treachery. "Let this day mark the beginning of a new era he announces, as if he were the self-appointed pontiff of a new form of liberation. "Let power change its sex — that is my fundamental principle."

Grass has never been better at working up a long series of bawdy tales, all of them thoroughly German, in a rich fantasy with serious political overtones. But fantasy of this sort can become a new form of intellectual terrorism, with realism in fiction now pretty well dead, the arbitrary in a writer's mind can break loose from all connections with fact and become absolute. Anything goes; anything is true. Grass escapes such terrorism whereas some of his U.S. counterparts (like Thomas Pynchon, Richard Brautigan and William Gass) do not — because of his solid grounding in his country's legends from the well-worn Nibelungen sa-gas to the Brothers Grimm to stories of modern war heroes.

Grass' novel is extremely fanci-ful, funny, political, contemporary. A fish, the flounder, is a little silly as Grass' stand-in in the novel commenting smartly, as it does, on all causes past and present, reporting all sorts of heroic and mythological gossip. outlining women's paradises and drafting regressive utopias, letting philological funcies run away with him. advising men and women separately on overall policy for survival.

An Old Story

Grass' idea for the flounder-asnarrator, however, comes from an old German story, "The Fisherman and His Wife," where he found the defamatory jingle which gave him his subject for the novel:

My wife -her name is Ilsebill -Has got a will that's not my will.

A man's will versus a woman's will is what the flounder urges us to think about, to laugh about, to resolve.

At the same time, the novel takes a great swipe at all nationalistic mythmakers, from Wagner and the Romantics to Hitler and the current rash of neo-Nazis, simply by twisting myths and legends to serve Grass' own liberal purposes. The legendary past, whether retrieved or refashioned or completely made up, should be liberalizing. I even suspect that Grass, imitating his enemies, the mythmakers them-selves, has made up most of the leg-endary material of the novel. Grass takes an even greater swipe here at those who hunt for historical myths to support their chauvinism — the superiority of men over women or women over men. "The German peoples," argues one of the early cooks won't listen to their women; that's why they will always get themselves wiped out." "She knew," the hero comments, "that history is forgotten between hunger and hunger." Anything, everything, Grass then warns, can be "faisified, twisted into a fairy tale." With this novel, Grass himself proceeds to do just

Grass himself proceeds to do just this, to show the evil of arbitrary myth making — but with the difference of making great fun of myths as they get mis-made and mis-used. Art, as Grass argues throughout this high-minded and low-humored novel, "refuses to be ruled out." For Grass — the bawdy humanist - art is an alternative to nationalism and chauvinism simply because the true artist refuses to take all the national myths seriously. They are for play; they are for fiction.

"I write about hunger, how it is scribed and disse written word," Grass' flounder proclaims. "I will write about us all at a table caten bare and about you and me and the fishbones in our throats." Nationalism is currently the fishbone in Grass' throat and the richness of this novel is his solution to politically bare times like

Poe's Residence Being Restored

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 14 (NYT) — Philadelphia, so full of historic places associated with founders of the republic, has often ignored some of its historic figures who happened to come later. It is remedying one such oversight with the half-million-dollar restoration of the house of its most distinguished literary light, Edgar Allan

It was while he lived at 530 North 7th Street in the 1840s that Poe wrote most of his most enduring poems and stories, including "The Fall of the House of Usher."

the club ace and two trump winners, lead to the spade king and finesse the spade ten. West was much more likely to have begun with two small spades than a dou-bleton jack, and if the spades were evenly divided there was no hope.

Just as a man condemned to die hopes for an improbable reprieve. so does a declarer in a hopeless contract look for a chance of salvation, however remote. He thinks of a distribution of the opposing cards that will allow him to succeed, and plays accordingly.

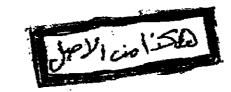

A fine example of reasoning of this type is shown in the diagram. South landed in a totally unsound contract of six diamonds. How should he have planned the play af-ter the opening lead of the club

North was mainly responsible for the disaster in the bidding. Instead of jumping to four diamonds he should have bid three no-trump. As it was, South's jump to slam was not unreasonable. With a sure trump loser, South had to find a way to avoid a club loser. A heart finesse offered a chance of discarding one club loser from his hand, but not two. The only alternative was to dispose of dummy's three club losers on the spades in the closed hand. Could this be done? Only if one

By Murray Chass

NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (NYT) - The New York Yankees, who lost Mike Torrez to archrival Boston in last year's free-agent market, opened this year's free-agent sales by snatching Luis Tiant away from the Red Sox i present to Tiant, the aged, Cuban-born right-hander, agreed to pitch for the Yank-ets for at least the next two years at about $250,000 a year, then serve as the team's director of Latin affairs for at least 10 years after he retires. His total package could reach about $850,000. As a pitcher, Tiant will be counted on to perform as he has in 204 victories spanning 15 major league seasons. As director of Latin affairs, a position that sounds as if it ranks in the State Department, Tiant will scout players in Mexico and other Latin American countries.

"Luis can be a fantastic asset for us in Latin American countries after his career." Al Rosen, the Yankee president, said at a Yankee Stadium news conference. "There's a lot of talent in those countries and Luis condescended to work for us on that basis."

Eight Years in Hub

First, however, the Yankees expect Tiant to be an asset worth at least 15 victories a year, including perhaps a few over the Red Sox, for whom he pitched the last eight seasons. In signing Tiant, who says he will be 38 years old Nov. 23, the Yankees got a pitcher who is at least six years older than Torrez, but who cost about $1.5 million less. This year Torrez won 16, lost 13 and had a 3.96 earned-run average for the Red Sox while Tiant, after a 7-0 start, finished with a 13-8 record and a 3.31 ERA.

The Red Sox offered Tiant a one-year contract for $250,000, but he wanted a longer-term deal for security so he opted for free agency. "I didn't want to go into the draft," Tiant explained in heavily accented English yesterday.

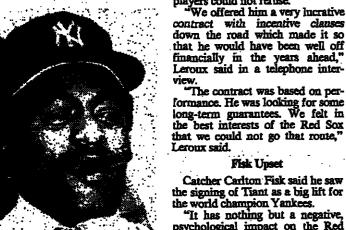

A Second Chance

"I think it was unfair what they did to me," he continued. "They let me go to the free agent draft and said I could take it or leave it. They told me they would only give me a one-year contract but I need security for my family. I'm looking out for number one. They gave me a chance to go back to the big leagues. I appreciate that. But I did well for them. I know I can still pitch. Not just pitching but winning. That's the important thing

Tiant, who left Cuba in 1961 and has never returned, was considered washed up as a major league pitcher after six years with Cleveland and one with Minnesota. However, about midway through the 1971 season, the Red Sox ressurected him and he proceeded to win 20 or more games

Red Sox Office Calm

BOSTON, Nov. 14 (UPI) --- Buddy Leroux, a Red Sox vice-president, said yesterday that he was not surprised to see Tiant sign with the Yankees, but that the right-hander had been given an offer by Boston that most players could not refuse.

Fisk Upset

Catcher Carlton Fisk said he saw the signing of Tiant as a big lift for the world champion Yankees.

"It has nothing but a negative, psychological impact on the Red Sox and a positive psychological impact on the Yankees, And so ooklond much of what goes on between the Red Sox and Yankees is psychological." Fisk said on a radio show.
"I never had the faintest worry
Tiant would not be with the Red

Sox. I didn't think the Red Sox could afford to let him go, especially to New York," Fisk said. "To let a pitcher slide through your fingers with talent and charisma. . .psychologically he can beat a team by going out to the mound. It doesn't matter how old

Money Isn't Everything

Evert hit her psychological low during a tournament in San Francisco a year ago when she was at the top of the women's tennis world. At the time, she had won more than 500 career matches and lost only 45, and her 1977 earnings had topped $1.3 million. But she realized she was not happy.

"Maybe I was winning too much," she was quoted as saying. "Night after night, it was just too much of a strain to get psyched up like that. Do you doubt that? Well, answer this: What is it that separates Johann Cruyff from George Best? Each is in his early 30s, each began as arguably the most gifted but errant teenage talents Europe has produced. Cruyff retired last week a millionaire and winner of virtually every prize, a man content after ironing out the temperament that had him suspended from interna-tionals after an attack on a referee early in his career.

Best, meanwhile, has frittered away his talents and his money and, despite a waning talent, is seeking ways around a ban by FIFA, the world's rulers, which prevents him from playing for any-one. Harsh were the words in London's high court yesterday when, in a libel case not connected directly with Best, a barrister saw fit to comment: "Best was a brilliant talent, but one of no use to his club [Manchester United] because he simply didn't turn up for

Now in other European leagues this may not be amazing. But in England, where the league is undoubtedly the most competitive (though I don't claim the best) in the world, Forest's run of 40 games without loss is without parallel. Yet

Ranger Fans Are Counting on the Swedes, All Two of Them

By Tony Kombeiser NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (NYT) — The Swedes have been together for so long you'd think they were joined at the hip. Together in Sweden on the national team. Together in Winnipeg on the Jets. Together again in New York on the Rangers. They have worn the same uniform and been invited to the same parties, endorsed the same line of clothing and been

Even if Nilsson's eyes are dark and Hedberg's are so palely blue that they border on gray. Even if both look more like Texas schoolboys than woodsmen in the north No matter. To the public they

Ranger fans say "the Swedes" as if it were an incantation, as if they expected them to rush onto the rink with long blond hair trailing behind them, flaming down the ice in special asbestos suits, carrying not sticks but huge hammers autographed by Thor. Joe D. and the Babe in thermal Nilsson and Hedberg spent four years in Winnipeg, in the well-it's-only-the WHA. But look at their numbers: Nilsson, who passes, never had fewer than 76 assists, never had fewer than 114 points and last season had 126. Hedberg, who shoots, never had fewer than 50 goals and two sea-sons ago had 70. This season, in 15 games, Nilsson has 6 goals and 5 assists, Hedberg 3 goals and 9 252228

Paging Dr. Richter If the numbers shout, the contract screams. Two years at $600,000 per. Each. At practice the other day, when the Rangers got their paychecks, Dave Farrish rolled an empty shopping cart up to Nilsson and said, "You can put yours in here" In New York, where fair is "great" and good is "unbelievable," the Swedes are off the scale. But superstars sit on a long thin limb, and fans tend to use a sharp saw. "I think," Nilsson says, "that it's very hard to explain to the public why we got so much money. They just see the salaries and say, These guys must really be great. In the long run I think they realize we have just two arms and two legs."

Ordered to Winnipeg In October, 1977, the National Hockey League told its member clubs that they could no longer retain their negotiation lists. This meant that the Toronto Maple Leafs no longer held the NHL rights to Hedberg and that the Pittsburgh Penguins had lost the rights to Nilsson. The ruling thus freed the Swedes, giving them ownership of their own NHL rights and allowing them to sell those rights to whatever team they chose to play for.

The next morning John Fergu-son, then general manager of the Rangers, put a scout on a plane to Winnipeg with an order, "Get me the Swedes."

The Rangers had the dollars on the table, but they didn't want to leave anything to chance. So the club spoke to representatives of the Swedish-American Chamber of Commerce in New York and suggested they help pitch the Swedes. Nilsson and Hedberg were introduced to Tom Ericson and Bengt Fasth, and in Swedish they discussed the merits and the demerits of living and working in New York City. "They asked about crime and pollution," Ericson Both men are married, and Nilsson, who at 28 is older by one year, has two children; the rea-

The compromise was to work in Manhattan, live in Scarsdale, 35 minutes from Madison Square Garden if there's no traffic, five minutes from the practice rink at Hawthorne.

that. They take the initiative. You can see it on the ice." On the ice they are something special, with a heightened sense of not only where they are but also where they're going - and the speed to get them there in a blur. They are darts, going from blue line to blue line in bursts. Nilsson, the center, is an artist with the puck; he makes it do tricks. You watch him, and you're sure he can make that puck sit up, lie down and roll over at his whim. Hedberg glides down the wing like a sea guil skimming over the ocean. If the average hockey player has three forward gears, Hedberg has the fourth overdrive -- and a shot to match.

No Identity Problems This is a class act. And they don't mind talking about it; the only thing that separates them from their Canadian teammates, other than the slightly bouncing cadence of their Swedish accents, is their merciful habit of not ending every sentence with "eh?" In the locker room after games they both stay and chat with reporters cagerly.

Fame is no problem. They take it in stride, just as they take in stride their public image as identi-cal twins. They giggle at that. They know it's not true; neither awakes in the middle of the night

ers. Though they're friends, they're hardly inseparable; last summer in Sweden they saw each other only once. By their own analyses Hedberg is more serious, more of a planner, while Nilsson is more jovial, more impulsive. What tickles them are the misconceptions they say Americans have

WASHINGTON (WP) — Mort Sahl, who once divided America into two kinds of people — those he appalled and those he amused — doesn't really smile.

That smile you thought you saw on the Ed Sullivan show, back when Mort Sahl would come out with his sweater, and the rolled-up newspaper, to make cracks about Eisenhower, now you can see it's just some-Eisenhower, now you can see it's just something that happens when he looks at you hard and stretches out that thin upper lip and reveals all those teeth, shining across the table in the twilight of an Italian restaurant. And he doesn't laugh then, either — it's a noise like somebody slapping books chur. VIA HALL shut: HAHA!

He goes back to his veal piccata, only to put his fork down again. He has just been asked what he's interested in talking about on his current radio show.

'You Gotta Fight'

Among other things are "capitalism and heterosexuality." Snaps Sahl: "But you got-ta fight for the right to talk about them these days. Capitalism has withstood Marx, but not Ralph Nader." He returns to the veal, as if the point is obvious. Clarification is requested.

Sahl frowns a tired, puzzled frown. So does his wife, China Lee, who's been with him since her great success in 1964 — as Playboy's August Playmate.

Well, the Nader line was a joke, one suspects.

"When kids get out of college, they've been listening to Ralph Nader for so long they think that businessmen are buzzards," Sahl says. And, on heterosexuality: "The women's movement is rather vocal — in fact, strident. HAHA! There's a total war on masculinity. Men say: Tm proud to say I'm ashamed to be a man.

China, in shiny brown blouse, leans across the table to announce: "I'm ashamed to be a woman! A lot of women, you know, would like to stay home, but they don't feel like they have the right anymore. I can't tell you how many women come up to me and say: 'I don't want a woman boss.' " It's suggested that Mort Sahl has moved to the right of his image in his late '50s hey-day, back when his audience at San Francis-co's hungry i seemed to be a collection of ex-Trotskyite Zen Buddhist sports-car-driving jazz fans for Adlai Stevenson. "My people," Sahl would call them in his routines.

"Mort's audience is the average working people," says China (rhymes with Sheena).
"I worked in Vegas for three years," Sahl says. "I played to gentiles, average Americans, people who are suspicious of big gov-ernment, people who listened when I talked about the Warren Commission. Not liberals — the liberals became the perpetuators of the status quo."

"You're not attacking liberals," China reminds him.

In 1953, Mort Sahl appeared on the stage of the hungry i (for intellectual), jettisoning the mother-in-law routines and ethnic jokes

Like the Miami U. bit: "You see them walking around with tennis rackets and bowling balls. . . those who have a major." Or the CIA spy plane: "Maybe the Russians will steal some of our secrets now and then they'll be two years behind. Actually, now we've got a U-2 surplus. The other day there were leaflets falling from the sky in downtown L.A. They said 'Your picture has been taken and is available for 25 cents.' And the existentialism jargon routine: "I took a walk in Central Park. These kids came running at me with knives. I said 'I admire your vagabond existence, I want to join you.' But they wouldn't accept the responsibility.

Exquisite! Sahl could take all the cliches all the inchoate stereotypes of an emerging generation and make his listeners feel like they belonged to it. He was the master of the hip allusion, the keywords that said: "We know better."

The new Mort Sahl. "I want to tell you something. . . "

His audience was the group founded by GI Bili barbarians who took intellectualism away from academics and the affluent; nevaway from academics and the affilient; never, however, without a certain uneasiness for which Sahl was a catharsis. This was back when you could say "Bloomsday" and all the English majors would break up; "bell-shaped curve," and you got the sociologists. He was one of them: He'd gone to USC after a tour in the Air Force, then hung around Berkeley sleeping on a window see

"If things go well," he'd tell crowds at the Cellar Door here, or at Mr. Kelly's in Chicago, or at Basin Street East in New York, next year we won't have to hold these meetings in secret."

The problem was, he was right. John Kennedy got elected and the trappings of intellect became so fashionable they were ordinary. The wonderful "we-few" feeling that he'd both nurtured and satirized eventually vanished. Mort Sahl had been coopted by reality.

Surprise

He explained, repeatedly, that "the liberals liked me until they became my target," but what was strange was his surprise. After John Kennedy was shot to death, Sahl committed himself to an ultimately unco-optable group — assassination buffs. For four years, off and on, he teamed up with New Orleans district attorney Jim Garrison, going "from $600,000 or $1 million a year gross income to $13,000," Sahl said in his autobiography, "Heartland."

"I had to live the past 10 years with the word 'paranoia,' " he wrote, recalling that he was also "accused of the most awesome crime of all in the eyes of show business of not being funny and beloved any longer. . Did I at 35 suddenly lose my stuff?"

The other day, at 51, from 4 to 7 p.m. on the radio, Mort Sahl was still raging at the liberals. But Sahl seemed to have lost some of the stuff on the old curve ball.

Ronald Reagan is a good pal of mine," he said. "We'll get him on the show. He said the Panama Canal is ours, we paid for it and we shouldn't have to give it back. The same way, Congress is Tongsun Park's — he paid for it and he shouldn't have to give it back."

He tried a joke about meeting a woman in a snowstorm. "She says to me, 'Why isn't the government doing something about this? I said: 'Haven't they already done enough?

By the end of the show, Sahl and the weatherman were trading huge laughs, forgetting about calls as they brought the happy-talk format to radio."

"Before I say goodnight, I want to tell you something," he concluded, his voice dropping. "I believe that America is at stake."
